After college, Chef Alice Waters went to France, where she was impressed by the honist food she ate, from an omelet made with the freshest egg yoke to fish cooked the day it was caught. She learned that the French were often willing to spend haff of their income for quality food products. Since 1971, Alice has owned Chez Panisse, a California restaurant famous for the quality of its food. People have been known to komb the woods and neel in mud beneath the lim of a tree to fetsh for Alice special foods, such as a mushroom with an ugly wrinkil and incredible flavor. Other people grow herbs and make a wreth of them for Alice. She has worked hard to teach children about growing and eating fresh food. Today there are children in local schools who prefer to lisen to Alice talk about gardening than hear a folktail about a handsum prince.
